Bush to Consult Allies On Nuclear Arms Cuts

By Juan Williams

WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan has announced that he is prepared to discuss "serious proposals" with the Soviet Union on reducing nuclear arse-nals and that he will send Vice President George Bush to Western Europe Jan. 30 to meet with allied leaders and the pope.

Mr. Bush will be traveling to eight European nations about the rime when the Reagan administration must decide on its negotiating position for nuclear arms talks with the Russians, scheduled to re-sume in Geneva early next month.

'A cornerstone of our approach to relations with the Soviet Union is close consultation with our allies on common political and security issues," Mr. Reagan said in his Saturday radio broadcast from Camp David, Maryland, "In this spirit, I've asked Vice President Bush to travel to Europe,"

In his broadcast, Mr. Reagan added that improved relations with the Soviet Union "must result from moderation in Soviet conduct, not just our own good intentions."

Mr. Reagan said that Mr. Bush also will meet with U.S. arms negoliators in Switzerland, Sources said that Mr. Bush may carry with him changes in the U.S. bargaining position at the arms talks but that the administration has not decided what proposals it will put forward at the talks.

Aides Said to Want Reagan to Seek Tax Rise

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan's chief economic advisers, going into the final days of decision making on the fiscal 1984 budget, plan to ask him Monday to approve tax increases to reduce deficits in later years when the economy presumably would be recovering, administration officials

The new tax plan is being described as one that would not conflict with the president's statement at his news conference Wednesday that "a tax is the wrong thing to do when you're trying to come out of

The proposal, described by an administration official as an "overhave the backing of key administration economic advisers, who have also urged Mr. Reagan to scale back his military buildup to hold down future deficits. The advisers include David A. Stockman, director of the Office of Management and Budget, Secre-tary of the Treasury Donald T. Regan and Martin Feldstein, chairman of the president's Council of

But an administration official said Satur-day that Mr. Weinberger may be able to "stall" beyond the deadline later this week for submission of the fiscal 1984 budget to the Significant budget savings by the Pentagon were described by administration officials as a necessary part of any "freeze" on government spending now being dis-cussed at the White House as a way to reduce deficits.

The idea of a freeze was raised with Mr. Reagan last week by congressional Republicans.

The president "was attracted to the idea," said an administration official, because it could be a simple yet bold stroke that Republican leaders had suggested would help him recapture the offensive in economic policy,

One official noted that the $33 billion in cuts that Mr. Reagan currently plans to seek in projected domestic spending for fiscal 1984 are already "close to a freeze"

But even with those cuts, the budget deficit for 1984 is projected to surpass $200 billion.

Administration officials said that Mr. Reagan's interest in the freeze idea stems partly from the prospect that it could appeal to both Democrats and Republicans. But administration officials cautioned that Mr. Reagan has yet to be fully convinced, partly because he must wait for Mr. Weinberger to report on what savings can be found in the Pentagon budget. Military spending is projected to he $247 billion next year.

Officials said some inflation adjustments that Mr. Weinberger is expected to accept would trim that figure slightly. But they added that the adjustments would not provide the kind of long-term savings Republican congressional leaders urged in meetings with Mr. Reagan

Although the rejection last year led to the negotiating process that eventually produced a compromise, some officials do not want the situation repeated this year as the 1984 presidential campaign picks up steam. "If we send up a budget and it gets knocked down, it will hurt Reagan politically," said an admin-istration official, "A replay of last year will really damage the presi-dent's political standing." Administration officials did not disclose the details of tax increases to be proposed to Mr. Reagan on Monday. But the increases were described as coming into effect only after economic recovery gets under way.

One reason that deficits are projected to expand in later years is because of the scheduled 1985 indexing of tax rates to inflation, Although this was not part of the original Reagan economic program, the president has defended it as vital, along with the last installment of his three-year, 25 percent

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan will announce this week that he will go ahead with a plan to give surplus grain to farmers who agree not to plant part of their crops this year, according to agriculture sources.

They said Mr. Reagan will tell delegates to the American Farm Bureau Federation convention Tuesday in Dallas that the payment-in-kind program, aimed at stimulating the depressed farm economy, will be set up without the authorizing legislation the administration sought -- but could not get -from Congress last month.

The president's appearance before the Farm Bureau comes at a time when many farmers, desperate over low prices and bleak prospects, are becoming increasingly militant in their demands for help from Washington.

There were two violent incidents last week in farming areas over the economie situation. Farmers were tear-gassed Tuesday at a foreclosure sale in Springfield, Colorado. In London, Ohio, a farm protest leader facing foreclosure scuffled Friday with an official of a credit association.

Meanwhile, Agriculture Secretary John R. Block announced Friday that he would hold a news conference in Dallas following Mr. Reagan's speech. He is expected to outline the new program.

Mr. Block last month proposed sharp departure from the administration's free-market philosophy. The proposal was an effort to deal with the huge surpluses that have depressed prices and sent the costs ing. Net farm income last year reached its lowest point since 1933. Under the plan, a farmer could retire from production as much as half his acreage this year. Participants would receive cotton, nee and other surplus grains, which they could sell or use to feed livestock. The plan would supplement an existing acreage-reduction program for which cash payments are

Mr. Fiallos, reached by telephone in Costa Rica, called the charges "a slanderous lie" designed to discredit him. He said in withdrawing the money he was acting under coded instructions from the Nicaraguan Foreign Ministry to turn the cash over to a secret emissary from Managua, and he said he had done so.

Mr. Pastora and Mr. Fiallos said the Sandinists had tried in the past to discredit a number of officials who have defected from the govemment, including Mr. Pastora: Alfredo Cesar, the former head of the nation's central bank; and Mr. Fiallos's predecessor. When Mr. Fiallos, a Harvard-trained at-torney, arrived in Washington a few months after Mr. Cruz resigned in December 1981, he put the house on the market. According to bank records and copies of cashier's checks obtained by The Washington Post, a series of withdrawals were made between April and September, leaving a balance on Sept. 7 of $687,944.09. Other embassy officials said those withdrawals were to cover operating expenses and requests from the Foreign Ministry.

Heart Patient's Mobility, Although a Hopeful Sign, Tends to Mask Problems

By Lawrence K. Altman New York Times Service

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah - Dr. Barney B. Clark's steps from bed to wheelchair are short and shuffling, but mobility is now clearly an important part of his life, more than five weeks after he became the world's first recipient of a permanent artificial heart.

This is a hopeful development, however, that tends to mask some of the more disturbing aspects of his slow, often perplexing recovery. The setbacks that have hobbled his comeback underline the tenuous nature of his reliance on a device that has beat about five million times and broken once.

Clark was wheeled out of the surgical intensive care unit of the University of Utah Medical Center to give him a new view of the surrounding snowcapped mountains and thereby help n adjust to a more normal environment.

outside the intensive care unit. After a trip Thursday, to the hospital sun room, Linda Giannelli, one of the nurses caring for Dr. Clark, said, "Today was the best day I have seen him have."

These are the scenes that his doctors and hospital officials bave described in recent bulletins and interviews. They have served to paint a somewhat rosy picture of Dr. Clark's recovery from the implant surgery and the several major complications that have followed.

But as time wore on, hospital officials have On Saturday, for the third time in a week, Dr. expressed concern over the slow state of Dr. Clark's recovery, as well as the perception among many people that his condition is better than it actually is.

John Dwan, a spokesman for the medical center, said he believed it reflected the boliday season and that "everyone is so anxious for Dr.

very sick man. Indeed, for the entire time Dr. Clark has been a patient, the state of his health bas been described as either critical or serious, never satisfactory or good. It has been "serious but stable" since Dec. 27.

It will be weeks, perhaps months, before Dr. Clark goes home, according to his doctors. And it may take an even longer time before the doctors can determine if he suffered permanent brain damage as a result of the seizures that he suffered on Dec. 7 or some other problem related to his chronic illness. So far, they say they have found no evidence of permanent brain

Dr. Clark is now at 6, he said.

Dr. Clark's mental status, too, has its ups and downs, as he occasionally loses touch with the present and lapses into the past, according to anecdotes provided by hospital officials and his family at news conferences.

Although Dr. Clark retired from his dental practice about five years 420, on Christmas Day he sat in a chair and talked as if he were practicing dentistry and running his office, Mr. Dwan

It is largely because Dr. Clark suffers from periods of mental confusion at unpredictable Karen Shaffer, spoke about the problem at a times that his doctors and his family have dewhen Dr. Clark's mental status was improving. his confusion could be a result of the sensory deprivation and confusion that many patients suffer in stays in intensive care units.

No psychological testing was done immediately before Dr. Clark received the artificial heart because he was too sick, and none has been done since then, Dr. Peterson said.

If the confusion is due to the so-called intensive care unit psychosis, as the doctors hope, Dr. Clark's mental status may return to normal before or even after he goes home. It is to remove him from the intensive care environment that he is taken on the wheelchair

Created in April 1981 on the initiative of Prince Talal ibn Abdul Aziz of Saudi Arabia, AGFUND chooses projects of a social and humanitarian nature that:

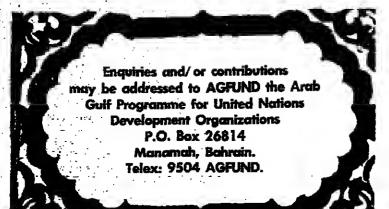

- supply basic needs,
- benefit the largest possible number of people,
- --- Transfer skills and technologies that can flourish in developing countries,
- -pay attention to the role of women in rural development,
- are in keeping with the country's development priorities.

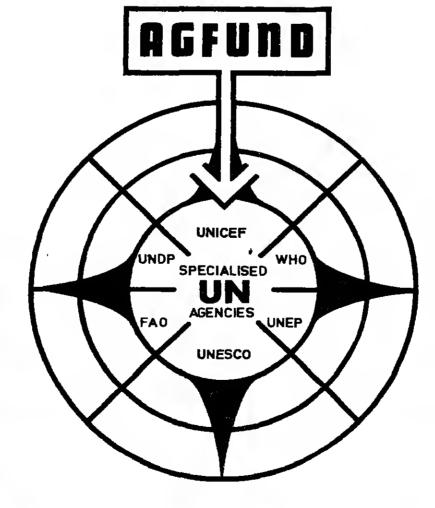

Among other needs, AGFUND is providing for the building of rural health stations, training primary school teachers, erecting water pumping stations, combatting dysentery, improving agricultural seed, fighting illiteracy, developing handicraft industries. AGFUND also sponsors the U.N. World Programme of Action Concerning Disabled Persons.

With current resources of $91,000,000 AGFUND is the leading source of external funding for the 42 projects to which it has so far committed $44,300,000.

In addition to regular contributions by the Governments of the Arab Gulf States, AGFUND has received voluntary contributions for UNICEF of $13,000,000 from the Governments of Saudi Arabia, Oman, France and Italy as well as from Saudi individuals, American and French companies and from private organizations and foundations.

The Failing Presidency

Reagan's White House. The people know it, judging by the opinion polls. Corporate titans

This central failure s know it and whisper disenchantment with a fellow conservative. Washington knows it budgeting process "an unmitigated outrage" and when Mr. Reagan's closest friend in the Senate depicts the president as "very close to set in concrete."

Mr. Reagan's loss of authority only halfway through his term should alarm all Americans. The economic nostrums he brought to office have not bad the predicted effect. Only by recognizing his errors will he find better ideas. To rationalize the failure so far, or to blame his predecessors, the media and Congress, is to condemn the nation to two more years of destructive confusion.

By his own reckoning Mr. Reagan became president for one reason; to restore the morale and power of America. By his own analysis that meant above all "the rejuvenation of our economy" so that America could regain industrial strength, put all its people to work and defend its interests around the world.

But the economy totters, dragging down the West and eroding American influence everywhere. An ill-planned military buildup, which the recovery was to have made painless, now threatens to aggravate already buge deficits in future years. Instead of forcing the Russians gan is forcing that choice upon Americans. By putting missiles ahead of jobs and allowing the military to appear as the enemy of prosperity.

The stench of failure hangs over Ronald he is sapping more of America's strength than

This central failure should overshadow all partisan or philosophical contests. devising a new and credible plan for recovery. Between the lines of his recent utterances, Mr. Reagan seems to concede major misjudg-ments. The huge tax cut he sold as a "supplyside" stimulus to investment is now necessary to "increase consumption," he says. The deficits be vowed to erase are now said to be growing and even desirable in the recessionary short run. The Pentagon's "minimum essential" budget becomes daily more pliable. What is lacking is any clear sense of direc-tion. And when frustrated members of Congress advocate a mere "freeze" on spending, they only emulate Mr. Reagan's abdication and flight from hard choices.

How much deficit spending does the presi-dent think is needed to assure economic growth in the months ahead? How would he then reduce the "intolerable" future deficits to proteet recovery? The customary politics can help him choose among a combination of cuts in Social Security and military spending to choose between guns and butter. Mr. Rea- and increased taxation. But only a president can lead in defining a strategy. Only a leader can succeed as president.

More Russian Roulette

powered by 100 pounds of uranium, is apparently out of control and about to re-enter the atmosphere. For the second time in four years the world awaits the radioactive debris from a failed Soviet space spy. One failure is bad luck, two is bad management.

Russian nuclear satellites are supposed to be boosted into higher orbit at the end of their useful lives to allow the radioactivity more time to decay. When the booster rocket of Cosmos 954 failed, radioactive remnants fell in northwestern Canada in January 1979.

In one sense, the Russian fallback provisions were successful: The nuclear fuel and most of the reactor burned up during re-entry. and no one was harmed, But thousands of hits of radioactive material reached the ground. one the size of a five-gallon drum, and Canada spent $14 million to find and dispose of the debris. The Russians coughed up only half the $6 million they were billed.

International reaction was flabby. President Jimmy Carter offered to forgo putting nuclear reactors into orbit if the Soviet Union would do likewise. The offer was painless, since the United States has no nuclear satellites. The Russians did not pursue the invitation, and Mr. Carter was persuaded not to renew it: nuclear reactors may be needed to power the beam weapons and other gadgetry advocated by some military planners. In fact, Mr. Carter's proposal has consider-Cosmos 1402. a Soviet radar satellite able merit. America does not require nuclear reactors to run its satellites because adequate power can be obtained from solar panels or radioactive isotopes. The isotopes are not part of a nuclear reactor; their heat is turned direeily into electricity. After a rocket failure in 1964 contaminated the upper atmosphere with several thousand curies of plutonium, the isotope packages were encapsulated to allow safe recovery in the event of return to earth.

Military planners have renewed their interest in nuclear-powered satellites and a new type of space reactor is under study. But once again it seems to be a military luxury, not necessity. A ban on reactors in earth orbit would be to America's present gain but probably to both sides' future advantage.

As for the present danger, the Soviets insist that the risk of damage is minuscule, Indeed, even if the active part of the reactor is not burned up during re-entry, the chances of radioactive debris hitting a populated area are small. But even a minuscule hazard is unacceptable; those at risk, with the possible exception of Soviet citizens, receive no benefit.

The Soviet Union is playing Russian roulette with the world. That the odds are long is no excuse for exposing others to some danger. The rain may fall on the just and the unjust alike, but no one should have to expect being showered with radioactive space junk from a bungled military spy mission.

Other Opinion

Two Views of Andropov ...

Grab the initiative, take the fight to the enemy, make 'em an offer they can't refuse, dance like a butterfly, sting like a bee. That seems to sum up the style the new Soviet leader, Yuri Andropov, had chosen for himself. For the 68year-old, scarcely younger than Ronald Reagan, his first seven weeks in office have produced a performance that would put Nijinsky and Nureyev to shame. We do know one of his key objectives: 10 stop, by book or by crook, the planned de-ployment of NATO's new missiles if no significant arms control progress is evident by the end of the year. As he points out shrewdly, the West need only procrastinate and then claim that deployment has been forced upon it. Deflecting that process will require some serious concessions, or a lot more acrobatics. - The Sunday Times (London).

In 1953 Dwight Eisenhower seized the opening created by the death of Stalin to make his famous "deeds not words" speech. Within two years he had a summit meeting with Khrush-chev and the treaty that ended Soviet occupation of Austria. In 1963 John Kennedy seized the opening left at the end of the Cuban missile crisis to make a famous speech on "the most important topic on earth, world peace."

bureaucracy by a general speech asserting the priority of peace. Mr. Andropov plainly wants deal. He came to the leadership through the backing of the Soviet military. They have extracted promises of more vigorous military efforts if arms control accords are not reached with America. But if the new leader has to find more resources for defense, the strained Soviet economy will be that much the worse.

Syndicated columnist Joseph Kraft.

... and Two of Reagan

Two years into the Reagan presidency, Americans are beginning to suspect the awful truth: They have a government incompetent to govern, a president frozen in ideological fantasyland, an administration spotted with fools.

The unmistakable sign of incompetence is Washington's economic disarray. The U.S. government faces a deficit approaching $200 billion in the next fiscal year. How is the president going to deal with it? His administration sends out contradictory signals twice a week. - Anthony Lewis in The New York Times.

Does America have representative government? It is no longer an academic question, not after the contemptuous way the president and Congress have flouted the public's clearly expressed wisbes. All during 1982, every poli showed that the American people rated unemployment as the nation's most-pressing probiem. And despite ardent and massive support for arms control and a nuclear freeze, the government continues to stall. - Clayton Fritchey in Newsday. needs to crack through the crust of his own

1908: Chinese Railway Victory

SHANGHAI — The central government bas scored a victory in the struggle over the rail-way loan. The Che-Kiang Railway dispute dates from 1905, when Steng, director-general of railways, seeing that work had not yet begun on the extension, gave notice to the Brit-isb syndicate which had held it since 1898 that it would be canceled unless work started within six months. Their reply was held back by Sheng, who obtained an Imperial Edict by which the concession was transferred to a provincial company. But the Chinese government has recognized the error it committed, canceled the concession to the provincial company and restored it to the British syndicate.

FROM OUR JAN. 10 PAGES, 75 AND 50 YEARS AGO 1933: Backyard Farming Pays

PARIS - The editorial in the Herald reads: The humble backyard farmer with his quarter acre of potatoes and his bordering berry bushes is about to be a national asset. These gentlemen, who bave furnished so many smiles for the readers of comic strips, are about to be taken seriously. For agriculture, in the opinion of all the experts, is to be the dominating question of 1933. To work upon land while trying to be an artist, a musician or an office worker is an unromantic compromise. But it is consonant with reality. There is also a psychological benefit. The practitioner has something to keep his mind off personal and general misfortunes over which be has no control."

and the Soviet Union have at least one thing in common: They are so suspicious of one another that whatever one side proposes, the other tends to reject. And this negative reaction applies even to the suggestion that the leaders of the two countries should get together and talk over their differences.

For example, President Reagan, in one of his amiable moods, suggested last year that it might be a good idea if President Brezhnev of the Soviet Union came to the United Nations in New York and maybe they could have a private talk on the side without agendas or expectations.

Mr. Brezhnev was seriously ill at that time, and the word came back from Moscow that such meetings should be "carefully prepared." Now

WASHINGTON - The govern-ments of the United States dicated that he would like to talk to Mr. Reagan, who is holding back and insisting that any such meeting should be "carefully prepared." Maybe the idea of informal talks at the summit is not wise, but the negative reaction on both sides is clear. When Washington wants in talk informally. Moscow objects, and when Moscow wants to. Washington objects. But with each passing month the arms race goes on.

It is interesting and may be signifi-cant that Soviet officials in Washington and at the United Nations are pressing for a Reagan-Andropov meeting. They are implying that imless the two leaders meet soon, the nuclear arms control negotiations in Geneva will get nowhere and Moscow will then "give up on Reagan" and wait for a change of policy and executive control in Washington.

Meanwhile, odd things are happening in Washington among the people who define the Reagan policy on nuclear arms control and the people who negotiate that policy with the Soviets in Geneva.

For example, Mr. Reagan appointed Eugene Rostow, former dean of the Yale Law School, and Paul Nirze a former official at the State Department and the Pentagon, to direct his arms control policy. They were the leaders of the Committee on the Present Danger, and regarded at the time of their appointments as intel-lectual hawks and highly skeptical of Soviet arms control policy. Over the last year, however, both have been charged with appointing officials and taking positions opposed to the views of extreme conservatives in Congress. and the White House.

Mr. Rostow has been unable to get the assistants he wants approved by Sen. Jesse Helms, and has threatened to resign unless he gets the support quilizing themselves with the notion of the White House.

Mr. Nitze's problem is more serious. He believes he was authorized by the president to discuss with the Soviet officials at Geneva how to break the stalemate on arms control not to commit the U.S. government to any possible compromise, but at least to discuss what might be done. But he was rebuked privately and then publicly, by "leaks" within the administration, for allegedly going beyond his authority. He will relurn to Geneva to carry on his negotiations with the Soviets with the support of the president but uncertain whether he will be under-cut by other officials of the Reagan administration who are really op-compromise with the Soviets.

It is no wonder, then, that Mr.

Reagan hesitates to have a private talk with Mr. Andropov about the control of nuclear weapons. He hasn't got his own policy and his own people together on what to say. He hasn't sided with Mr. Rostow on the issue of his assistants. He hasn't faced up to Jesse Helms. He has supported Mr. Nitze vaguely but done nothing about his own people who are cutting the negotiator up.

Of course this is all helpful to the Soviets, who observe that the administration is divided on the policies it is trying to negotiate at Geneva.

Accordingly, they are saying that maybe Mr. Reagan and Mr. Andropov should get together and see if they can't untangle this mess. Tacy even talk about where such a summit should take place. In Scandinavia? In Geneva? Maybe even somewhere at sea, where they might be able to talk privately without newspaper report-ers and television cameras.

The NATO allies wonder about this hut think it might not be a bad idea. They seem to believe that unless a serious effort is made by Washing ton and Moscow to resolve their differences over nuclear arms, they will be unable to persuade their own people to support Mr. Reagan's policy of putting cruise and Pershing missiles on their territory to maintain a bal-ance of power with the Soviets.

Maybe, as many in Washington believe an informal Reagan-Andropov meeting is a burn idea. But there general agreement in Washington that Mr. Reagan should at least get his own policy and people together. and so far this has not been done. The New York Times.

China is embarking on sensitive negotiations with the Soviet Union about arms and security. But how can it do this? It is much weaker. Doesn't it know there is a fundamental law that countries may negotiate only from strength? China's nuclear capability is still primitive — tiny compared to the So-viet Union's gigantic arsenal. So bow come the Chinese aren't using all possible strategems to delay negotiations, to provide time for the necessary nuclear buildup? Don't they realize they may be subject to nuclear blackmail? Why aren't they afraid of being "Finlandized"?

What strategy could the Chinese conceivably have in mind? Are they imitating General de Gaulle, who thought it was adequate to be able "to tear an arm off the aggressor?" Talks Might Stop the Space Weapons Race

WASHINGTON - In 1969, at the time that W the United States entered the strategic arms limitation talks, the U.S. Air Force was about to flight-test a dramatically new weapons technology. This new concept, multiple inde-pendently targeted re-entry vehicles, was a breakthrough in that each ballistic missile would have the capability to attack several targets.

Concerned senators asked that MIRVs be placed on the SALT agenda and that flight tests be canceled in the interim. The Nixon administration rejected this advice, in the belief that MIRVs would provide the United States with a significant military advantage that the Soviets would be hard pressed to match.

But the Soviets deployed M1RVs much sooner than expected, and now they are a principal cause of American strategic vulnerability. Today America is at a comparable juncture in the development of space weapons, and the quest for short-term advantage may lead to similar long-term results. Unless there is a serious negotiating effort, anti-satellite (ASAT) weapons could prove to be the MIRVs of the 1980s. In the early 1970s the Soviets deployed an anti-satellite weapon that they have maintained and continued to test. Although this weapon has limited ability to attack large numbers of U.S. satellites, the absence of a U.S. equivalent does

In the most recent test of this system in June. the ASAT was fired in coordination with launches of land-based and sea-based strategic weapons, a MIRVed SS-20 theater missile and anti-ballistic missile defenses. This demonstration led some analysts to conclude that the Kremlin views ASATs as an important element for the waging of nuclear war.

veloping laser and particle-beam weapons that could be deployed in or directed at space. This program may not be completed for more than a decade, but the Soviet Union is said to be at least five years ahead of America in the development of these death rays. Taken as a whole, the Soviets now spend three to five times as much as America does on militarizing space.

The United States must take defensive measures against these developments. To begin with. it can reduce risks by stocking backup systems that could be launched if U.S. satellites are threatened. The space shuttle could help put replacement satellites rapidly into position. I have far less confidence in military countermeasures in space. Hardening satellites or providing them with the capability to maneuver away from an attacker would add significantly to satellite costs and reduce the payload oirected at the satellites' primary mission - and it may not work. Countermeasures invite counter-countermeasures, and escape techniques are futile against beams traveling at the speed of light. The most desirable remedy to the space weapons threat is a ban on space weaponry. Arms control talks aimed at this end bave not received the attention they deserve. The apparent successes on the ground of the not yet flight-tested American ASAT are perhaps the chief cause of the neglect of arms control. When the U.S. version of the ASAT was inaugurated, the primary motive was to draw Moscow into talks aimed at dismantling the Soviet come from ASATs alone. Moscow is actively de- ASAT in exchange for cancellation of the U.S.

program. After three rounds in 1978 and 1979. the talks were broken off after the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and the United States has made no effort to revive them. Strategic planners are reluctant to bargain away the U.S. ASAT now that it appears that it will be significantly better than the Soviets' deployed weapon

As in the case of MIRV development, the United States has sought short-run advantage. In the long run, the benefits will be meager. Given the current dynamics of the Soviet spaceweapons development program, the failure to stop ASATs and other space weapons will surely produce new Soviet deployments. In this race, the United States has far more to lose because it will continue to depend on space systems more than the Soviets will. Oceans separate America from areas that are in its national interest to defend, whereas the Soviet Union is in the heart of Eurasia - meaning that, while land lines provide the Soviets with rapid communications to their military forces, the command and control of U.S. military units is best achieved via satellites.

Pursuing a space weapons race makes little sense. America faces major deficiencies in its ex-isting force structure. Adding another dimension to the competition would require spreading our-selves even thinner. Besides, avoiding war re-quires some degree of stability in military developments, and introducing a space weapons race would undermine the delicate balance of terror as well as the predictability that defense officials require for effective force planning. The United States has every reason to give space arms control a try. With our ability to quickly test and deploy the U.S. ASAT as a backdrop, the Soviets may now negotiate seriously. Should negotiations fail, we would retain our current space weapons option. Los Angeles Times.

Danton and Wajda on Revolution

PARIS — Andrzej Wajda, the Polish director, has taken a new look at revolution, in his film "Danton." It focuses on a short period of the French Revolution when Robespierre, carried away with the momenturn of the terror that be has launched, sends his former comrade Danton and friends to the guillotine. Mr. Wajda denies that be intended a metaphor, a parallel between Danton and Lech Walesa, or that his purpose was to show that repression in the name of a cause reproduces itself and devours the cause it claims. Yet he has produced one of the most powerful attacks on the thesis of violent revolution I have seen. It is Polish play, although it speaks only of France and was made in France. The conflict between Robespierre and Danton, Mr. Wajda says, "is precisely the moment we are living through now. The Western world that's Danton. The East, that's Robespierre, and his arguments are difficult to refute. Danton's arguments are very close to us." The original play by Stanislawa Przybyszewska takes Robespierre's side, inspired by a communist view of history popular among intellectuals between the two world wars, which urges the revolution on despite the terrible price in lives and suffering, on the ground that stopping short of ultimate victory would fail to win power for the masses in whose name the revolution began.

That is the thesis of Ayatollah

Khomeini and his mullahs, although in the name of religion rather than communism. It was Mao's, with his idea of permanent revolution. In Mr. Wajda's hands, the hero is Danton, who wanted to stop when the revolutionary toll became too horrible, with ordinary people worse off than before. He wanted peace, a surcease from the fever of violence, a chance for people to breathe normally even at the cost of compromise and not achieving all goals at once.

As he goes to the guillotine, Dan-reference to Russia comes from an editor whose paper Robespierre has ordered closed and who argues, "If they had a free press in Moscow, Russia would be a republic." Still, Polish audiences have been trained by centuries of censorship to see subtle analogies, to sniff out defiance of lyranny from the seemingly most distant, densest subjects. It will be interesting to watch Warsaw's reaction, and revealing of the military regime's own sense of where it is and what it can do. Because he is Wajda, the director obviously had modern Poland on his mind even as he recounted French history. But perhaps also because he is Polish, be could present the most current of problems without the cant of fanaticism or ideology. The result is a refreshing reminder for everybody else that the artempt to solve problems by creating bigger ones, by intimidation or force, is no solution at all. It is terror, not progress.

Regulating the Banks

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Regarding the editorial "Bailing Out

the Banks" (IHT, Dec. 28): This editorial on the IMF and the banking crisis reprimands Rep. Fernand St. Germain and others for saying that the proposed IMF funding increase is essentially a bail-out of the big international banks. Such charges, says the editorial, "are both inaccurate and irrelevant." Unfortunately, this is not the case.

The charge is accurate because the U.S. taxpayer is indeed being asked to guarantee some repayment, via the IMF, of what the editorial iself calls "some spectacularly unwise loans to the Latins." The charge is also relevant if only because many politically influential people believe that it is chiefly the folly of the big banks that has got us into the present mess.

Obviously the IMF quota increase is necessary, and urgently so. The point of responsible skeptics is that there must be strings attached not only to the debtor countries but to the banks. International banking especially the off-shore markets, must be regulated as is domestic banking.

Buyers' Uncertainty Brings Unusual Variety to Market

PARIS — There is a little something for every taste on the Eurobond market this week — a sign that investment bankers are not quite sure what investors want to do with their money this year.

The dollar, despite its continuing weakness on the foreign exchange market, remains the premier currency although the Deutsche mark—with 2.9 billion DM of new issues scheduled over the coming six weeks—is clearly coming back into favor. is clearly coming back into favor.

The European currency unit, a cocktail of EC currencies, shows signs of becoming a constant, albeit small, part of the weekly calendar. The currency composition is completed with a single issue denominated in sterling — presumably appealing to investors seeking high coupons and willing to speculate that the currency has been oversold.

The dollar calendar rised is musually varied. Investors have the choice of five, seven, eight 10 or 15-year maturities, straight or convertible fixed-rate paper or Boating-rate notes. But indicative of the misure mood of investors, half of the dollar is Looking back to last year, which with its record interest rates and strong dollar may not prove to be much of a guide to what happens this year, investors in dollar bonds did very well indeed. According to a study by Salomon Brothers, total returns (income, price change and, where applicable, currency return) for U.S. and Canadian dollar bonds far outstripped those of any Other currency.

Overall, bonds — for the first time since Salomon began keeping score in 1978 — outperformed short-term investments in the eight currency sectors covered in the study. "Yankee" bonds - issues of foreign entities floated in the U.S. market — turned in the best performance, for a total return of 40 percent, followed by Canadian government domestic issues with 35.8-percent, U.S. government domestic issues with 31.3 percent and Eurodollar bonds with 30.5 percent.

For Swiss investors, the return on the U.S. dollar investments would jump another 10 percentage points to account for the dollar's gain against the franc last year. For West German investors, 5.5 points would be added for the dollar's gain over the mark. British and French investors would add 15.3 points to account for their currency gains in the dollar, while the Japanese would add 6.4 points.

Yen Bonds Stand Out

Perhaps more indicative of what may be in store this year was the Salomon analysis of total returns for the two final months of last year, when the dollar began its sharp decline. The best-performing market then was in yen-denominated bonds - a total return of 23 percent, which includes an 18 percent appreciation against the dollar.

Currently, investors are given the chance to play the yen market through a 540-million convertible bond being offered by Kyowa Hakko. The Japanese pharmacentical company is offering 15-year bonds that will be convertible into common stock at an expected price of 5 percent over the prevailing Tokyo quote when final terms are set Jan. 13. At the same time, the exchange rate for converting the dollar bond into yen will also be set for the life of the bond. The coupon is expected to be set at 61/2

Noteworthy among the other dollar offerings is Sweden's $1-billion floater, the largest single issue ever launched on the Eurobond market. The 19 managers and 120 sub-underwriters of this issue were reported to have placed about two-thirds of it by Friday. The notes were trading at a discount of 1.05 points from the par subscription price — inside the 1½-percent commission Sweden is paying. This means underwriters are showing a profit on the deat showing a profit on the deal.

Also worth noting are the two issues for U.S. borrowers. It had been widely supposed that U.S. borrowers would shun the market because rates would be more expensive than at home, reflecting the dollar's lack of appeal to foreign investors. But Time-Life's $100-million, seven-year issue bearing a coupon of 10% percent is costing it about a quarter-point less than it would have ture to discuss the form any coophad to pay in New York, while Continental Group's $75-million, 10-year reation in consumer electronics bond bearing a coupon of 11½ percent represents a saving of about # might take. Is In, Science Out By Sandra Salmans New York Times Service

NEW YORK - In the 1960s, decentralization was the vogue in management. In the 1970s, "corporate strategy" became the buzzword. Now, "corporate culture" is the magic phrase that management consultants are breathing into the ears of U.S. executives.

Management: Art

Loosely defined, a company's culture is the amalgam of beliefs, mythology, values and rituals that, even more than its products, differentiates it from other companies.

That corporations, no less than churches or universities, have distinct cultures has been acknowledged in classrooms and board rooms for years. Increasingly, however, managers and management consultants are coming around to the view that management is an art, not a science, and that while a carefully shaped strategy may make or break a company, the corporate culture may make or break the strategy.

"Strategy isn't much good unless you can do something about it," said Robert H. Waterman Ir., a director of Mckinsey & Co., a consulting firm. "It's nice to have ideas that knock the socks off the competition but looking back, managers, consultants, business schools realized that companies haven't been able to implement that many strategies."

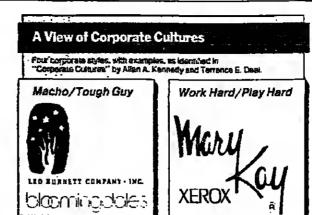

Management thinkers now acknowledge that organizations have distinct identities and tones, often acquired from their chief executive Citicorp's creative tension from Walter B. Wriston, for example, or Mary Kay Cosmetics' cheerful nurturing of employees, repeatedly assured by the founder, Mary Kay Ash, that "you can do it."

Another reason for the vogue in corporate culture may be the in-tense interest in Japanese companies, seen as models of strong, homogeneous cultures.

There is good news from America," Mr. Waterman and his coauthor, Thomas J. Peters, proclaim in their book, "In Search of Excel-(Mr. Peters is an independent consultant formerly with McKinsey.) Similarly, the authors of "Corporate Cultures," Allan A. Kennedy, a principal at McKinsey, and Terrence E. Deal, a professor at Harvard's Graduate School of Education, dismiss "scientific" management and declare that the solution to the U.S. industrial malaise is as American as apple pic."

As these two recent books indicate, nowhere has the notion of As these two recent books indicate, nowhere has the notion of corporate culture been more enthusiastically embraced than at McKinsey. In fact, a cynical interpretation of the latest management vogue is that it nicely positions McKinsey itself for the 1980s.

Although it remains the unchallenged leader in management consulting, McKinsey had been overtaken intellectually in the 1970s by the quantitatively inclined Boston Consulting Group. BCG, as it is known, became the apostle of the matrix, the strategic business unit and the experience curve, "BCG is the champion of the analytical approach," said John Roach, vice president, strategic management practice, at Booz Allen & Hamilton, a leading consultancy that melds the two approaches. 'Mckinsey has always been a touchy-feely firm."

But the shift in management thinking has also cropped up in semi-nars by other consulting firms, including BCG. In his current speech-es on strategy, Alan J. Zakon, BCG's chief executive, describes not only developing a corporate strategy and reorganizing to carry it out.

issue to the subject. Last winter, the Harvard Business School introduced its first course devoted to corporate culture. Central Bankers Questioning Role As Crisis Lenders

By Carl Gewirtz

PARIS - Western central bankers, who last year were eager to be seen lending major international debtors large sums to tide them over cash squeezes, are beginning to have second thoughts about the role they have assumed as worldwide lenders of last resort to sovereign borrowers.

The central bankers, who collaborate through the Bank for International Scittements in Basel, appear to agree that the BIS does have an important role to play in situations that threaten to explode into an international crisis.

Last year, for example, it moved with unusual speed and publicity to keep Hungary, a member of the BIS, affoat when a sudden drying up of short-term loans from Western commercial banks threatened to drive the country into default.

The normally publicity-shy BIS hrink," said one international was also in the forefront in lending monetary official. Against this background, government officials are beginning to question what role the BIS should play in lending to countries - a subject that officials say will dominate the regular monthly meeting of the BIS governors Monday and Tuesday.

"Opinion is divided over what role the BIS should play," said one official, who added that views differ not country by country but among the experts of each country. "But there is a clear reluctance by some to be drawn into playing the role of an international fire bri-

tarkets Shrug Off Rise in M-1

By Kenneth N. Gilpin New York Times Service NEW YORK - The Federal Reserve's report that the basic money supply grew in the latest week ed some analysis hui did noi upset the credit markets.

Short-term interest rates rose very slightly late Friday after the Fed reported that M-1 rose $500. million in the week ended Dec, 29, The Fed said that M-1, which con sists of currency plus most checking accounts, rose to $478.4 billion.

U.S. CREDIT MARKETS surprising analysts who had been expecting a drop of as much as $1

For the latest 13-week period the Fed reported, M-1 averaged $473.9 billion, a 16-percent in crease from the previous 13 weeks. "The money numbers were stronger than most people expect-ed, said Richard Green, president of Money Marker Services Inc., but that disappointment was not reflected in prices. People are earning to pay less attention to M-

lon

Although M-1 is rising far above original growth targets, the Fed since October has said that M-1 no longer has as much significance as a money supply measure, partly be-cause of changes in savings and checking accounts offered by U.S. banks. The Fed has decided to pay more attention to broader money

Analysts suggested that a decline in the federal funds rate, which of the day, was another reason the many expected with its $100-million DM of five-year notes at par money supply news Friday. The federal funds rate is the charge on overnight loans between banks.

The market, and particularly the short end, is very comforted by a funds rate at those levels," said Philip Braverman, a vice president at Chase Manbattan Bank, because that signals the potential for a discount rate cut, which the market expects could come soon." The discount rate, which is the Fed's charge for loans to banks and otherfinancial institutions; has been reduced half a dozen times in recent months and is now at 81/2 percent.

By the close Friday, the three-month Treasury bill was bid at 7.84 percent, down 0.08 percentage point on the day. It had fallen even more before the Fed's late afternoon announcement, but then rose in late trading in reaction to the money supply figure, analysts said.

Among longer-term issues, the money supply announcement had almost no impact. Prices for the 94 percent two year of rensury notes. rose less than one-quarter point, to 100%, producing a yield of 9.23 percent. The McKinsey books emerged from a four-year research project under Mr. Waterman into the roots of the success of 75 innovative, highly regarded companies, including IBM, Procter & Gamble, Gen-eral Electric, McDonald's and 3M. They proved to be "brilliant on the basics," Mr. Waterman and Mr. Peters found. They insisted on top quality. They favned on their cus-tomers. They listened to their en-ployees and treated them like

- Most companies have slogans, byword of Ray Kroc, the founder, and is still stressed at Hamburger University, where the company's new franchisces are trained.

IBM, although surpassed technologically by some smaller com-panies, has impressed its employ-ees and customers that "IBM Means Service." Delta Air Lines seeks to instill "Family Feeling." > While the McKinsey people em-phasize that no one culture is intrinsically superior to another, they clearly believe that some cultures are more appropriate to certain industries and functions. "We're not going out and say, 'You need culture,' "Mr. Waterman said, but modifications of the culture may be recommended.

First, a company should find out how it is perceived by its employ-ees. Mr. Kennedy suggested: "Is that what they want to be about?" he asked rhetorically. "If not, they can create programs, such as inno-vation awards."

In fact, the question of cultural change most perturbs critics of the McKinsey analysis.

in a report released during the weekend, the National Association of Purchasing Management said its composite index — based on new orders, production, employment, inventories and vendor performance - moved up to 41 from 37.3 in November.

The rate of decline in new orders slowed, as did the drop in employment. The speed of vendor deliveries was the best in more than a year, but the level of production fell to the lowest of the year.

U.S. Says Funds Rise In New Bank Accounts The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Deposits in new money-market accounts at banks and savings institutions averaged $79 hillion after 15 days of operations, the Federal Reserve Board has reported.

The figure, issued Friday for the banking week ended Dec. 29, com-pared with $58.5 billion in deposits in the previous week. As part of the deregulation of the banking industry. federal authorities allowed banks and thrift institutions to offer money-market accounts without interest rate ceilings beginning Dec. 14.

EC Measures Impact Of Tokyo Trade Move

Reuters

BRUSSELS — The reductions recently announced by Japan on import tariffs cover only about 10 percent of the European Community's sales to that country, according to an EC study.

The study, ordered after Japan announced a package of tariff cuts lass month, showed that the latest reductions cover items valued at only about $100 million of trade in 1981. In its announcement last month, Japan said it would cut import duties on 75 products and increase import quotas for six farm products.

The study also said that in many cases Japan cut or eliminated tariffs on products for which it is very competitive but that it kept high tariffs on leather, leather goods and copper. The report added that there was no precise plan to increase imports of manufactured goods besides the creation of various committees and

MOSCOW CIRCLES

By Benedict Erofeev. Translated from the Russian by J. R. Dorrell. 188 pp. $12.95. Norton, 500 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10110.

Reviewed by Walter Goodman

FOR years, the most interesting writing to come on a first in writing to come out of the Soviet Union has been samizdat - literally, self-publishing house those unorthodox works, banned by the state, that are circulated hand to hand, sometimes finding a sizable readership and a reputation for their suthors. The author of Moscow Circles" is 44-year-old Benedict Erofeev, who, the jacket informs us, was expelled from the University of Moscow for his "exaggerated ideas" and who worked as an underground cable-layer before becoming a popular under-ground writer. Completed in 1969. Moscow Circles" was the first of his books to find its way West, and was well received in France and It-

If "Moscow Circles," written in the first person, has much autobiography in it, then Erofeev is an merate and unrepentant alcoholic. Bot no one can be convicted of anything on the basis of this surrealistic work, which carries Benny on a train trip out of Moscow, drinking, talking about drinking with some peculiar fellow passengers and, especially, dreaming about drinking. The humor is not subtle and not always all that fundamental property with and low ny. Benny's spirits, high and low. depend on the level of his bottled spirits, and the book rises and falls with them.

Benny is, or imagines he is. bound from Moscow to Petushki about 70 miles away, to meet the girl he loves: "This is a woman whose breast has not yet been pressed by anything but premoni-tion. No one has felt anything of hers, not even her pulse." En route, he meets up with a loony bunch of other drunkards, and all tell tales of their drinking; it's like a meeting of Alcoholics Anonymous staged by Mooty Python and salted with digs at the official Soviet world view. Benny reports on a trip he claims to have made to the United States, "that continent of sorrow," where "freedom is nothing but a

IN the diagramed deal, North-South reached six diamonds with all the aces and kings but a total lack of queens. Two of the queens proved to be crucial.

South won the heart lead in his hand, led to the trump king and made the percentage play in trumps by finessing the jack. When this lost, he was left with the problem of the club queen. As he procccded to demonstrate, he was not totally dependent on the club finesse. He won the heart return with the ace, cashed the king and ace of spades and ruffed a spade.

This left East with the only protection in spades, so when South ran all his trumps, coming down to two clubs and a spade in the dummy, East had to unguard the queen of clubs to keep the spade queen. The queen fell automatically under

Ayala Maneuvers to Avoid Prison

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) - Undefeated Tony Ayala Jr., the world's top-ranked junior middleweight boxer, apparently has staved off attempts in Texas to revoke his probation and send him to prison because of his arrest on a New Jersey rape charge.

Ayala has hired State Representative Joe Hernandez to represent him and, under Texas law, his trial can be delayed. Anyone who hires a lawmaker as his attorney within 30 days of the start of a legislative session is entitled to an automatic continuance until 30 days after the legislature adjourns. The Texas Legislature convenes Tuesday and will stay in session at least until June.

Ayala, 19, has been jailed in lieu of $50,000 bond since New Year's Day. He was charged with burglary, aggravated assault and sexual assoult in connection with the attack of a woman in the apartment complex where he lives in West Paterson, New Jersey. Passaic County prosecutors in New Jersey said Ayala could not be tried there for at least six months because of a crowded court docket.

WASHINGTON — The award VV Ior the best new politico-diplomatic usage of 1982 goes to Sahabzada Yaquh Khan, foreign minister of Pakistan, who used a word I had never heard before to describe the country that lies between the Soviet Union and the gateway to the Gulf: "Afghanistan might one day be intended by the Soviets to be a glacis."

Yaqub Khan, who converses easily in Romance languages as well as in Russian and Urou, was puzzled at the lack of understanding by the American press: Glacis is an old, established English word with a modern figurative meaning. From the sentence context, I offered buffer as a synonym. which the foreign minister accepted.

But glacis, pronounced GLAYsis, is metaphorically much richer. Derived from the Old French glacier, "to slip, slide." a glacis began n English more than three centuries ago, meaning a fortification that sloped gradually to ground level, permitting an unrestricted field of fire. Later, glacis plates were sloping armor plates on ships. Finally, the figurative use took over: Easi Germany was seen by The Times of London in 1955 as "part of Russia's defensive glacis," and The Observer five years later agreed that the countries of Eastern Europe formed "the glacis between the Soviet Union and the

A glacis state, then, is one that forms a defensive barrier between one power and its potential encmies. The phrase, with its defensive connotation, is much better than the in-between buffer state (from buff, or blow, meaning now a padding to absorb shocks), which means "a state between two powers whose position lessens the chance of conflict." A buffer separates both; a glacis does that, too, but especially forms part of the defense

AS THE debate on Social Security beats up, a shadowy cliche slouches toward Washington: Cap the entitlement.

Cap began as a noun to the early 1970s, drawing on the image of 'capping" an oil well. The earliest citation anybody I know can find is in the files of Merriam-Webster: We have a somewhat ambiguous citation from The Wall Street Journal of May 22, 1972," reports Fred-erick Mish, editorial director, "applying the term to a 'rule' tperbaps a federal regulation) which limited the extent 10 which certain companies could raise their prices at that

Our earliest clear-cut instance includes cap as a piece of jargon meaning the same thing as ceiling." li is from the July-August 1973 is-sue of The Mailhandler, a union publication.

As conservatism reared its costcutting head, cap turned into a verh: Politicians volunteered to cap everything from welfare to properly taxes.

But then the capping ran into the other side's word: entitlements. Nobody, said the benefit-minded, was going to cap entitlements.

That word lay aborning in a law passed by the Congress in 1944: it should be clearly provided that entitlement to pay and allowances is not to be terminated on the actual date of death . . . ?

For many, the new word was a euphemism for welfare, which once was a euphemism for relief. Then, in the mid-1970s, it was adopted by middle-roaders who felt the pressure to do something about spending: "He indicated a belief that something had to be done to hold down the growth of programs," wrote The New York Times about Representative Brock Adams, "granting an automatic entitlement' lo eligible individuals. Among these are food stamps, welfare and health-care financing."

Cost cutiers took up the cry of "doing something about entitle-ments." To this day people who ments. believe in the redistribution of wealth for compassion for the truly needy) resist the notion that entitlement is merely a cuphemism for welfare: "Entitlement includes both earned benefits and unearned benefits," says Ceil Frank at the Office of Family Assistance in Washington, Social Security and veterans' benefits are earned benefits, and unearned benefits is what welfare refers to."

Liberals take care to divide funds transferred to people by the government into public assistance welfare - and entitlements, which carries the connotation "earned, deserved," Conservatives tend to lump the two together and demand that a cap be placed on it.

Brown-Bagging

David Lyon's, Er, Bag Is Finding Out What an Estimated 60 Million People Put in Their Sacks

By Samuel G. Freedman New York Times Service

WESTPORT. Connecticut — W David Lyon, a marketing specialist nurtured on radish sandwiches, began two years ago to chart what he calls the brownbag lunch universe. He soon nade his first discovery.

"I found I knew more about hrown-bagging than anyone I knew. So I decided to plant my flag on that jurf. No one's challenged it, so I guess I'm the ma-

The medium of the maven is the Brown Bag Institute. The marketing research company, operated out of one room of Lyon's home in Westport, plumbs the tastes of the 60 million American hrown-baggers and sells the re-sults to clients in the food industry. In the course of his investigations, in which he has used sampling methods to arrive at such figures, Lyon, 71, has become something of a sage on the personality as well as the palate of the brown-bagger.

"Lunchtime guerrillas," he called them, adding: "They're living off the land, making their own way off their own living skills. It's the same way I feel about keeping my old Volvo — 177,000 miles — going They won't get me to buy a new one."

Still. Lyon has come to dispute the stereotype of the hrown bagger as someone who puts a ham-and-cheese sandwich, a banana and a container of coffee in his basalt-colored, torpedosbaped lunch box. works in a foundry and dines while sitting on a plywood board laid across two oil drums.

"Actually," he maintained, "hrown-haggers are rather upscale." Compared with the rest of the population, Lyon said, twice many brown-haggers have family tocomes of more than $30,000. More have attended college. And of all the brownhaggers in the United States, only 25 percent work in factories.

Given their status, why, then, do brown-baggers pass up the delicatessens, the company cafeterias and the tax-deductible business lunches? Many. Lyon believes, brown-hag to maintain greater control over how much they can or what they can particularly those on vegetarian, lowsalt, low-cholesterol or kosher diets. Others carry lunch to save money: Lyon's most recent survey, conducted two months ago, found that brown-baggers say they save $1.80 a day hy carrying their lunch, which, on the basis of his estimate of 6.5 hillion sack lunches a year, means a total of

S11.7 hillion "Congress can't save that much," Lyon noted. About a third of the hrown-haggers are schoolchildren, who, Lyon believes, are also responsiple for disproportionate levels of angst among the adults who feed

"Mothers have a great sense of guilt about what they put in their children's lunches. The kid'll want the same thing Ior, like, eight weeks straight. And the mother thinks, 'What's the teacher going to think of me, giving peanut butter every day?"

Brown-bagging is indeed rich in tradition — or routine — Lyon found. Adults continue to favor meat sandwiches and children abide by peanut butter. The poll-ing has disclosed some surprises, bowever: An increasing number of people carry salads (the precise number is a secret, Lyon said) and a substantial minority of hrown-baggers have access to microwave ovens or refrigerators. "But it's amazing bow little things have changed since I was a Lyon said. His own hrown-hagging began when a doctor told his mother that his eczema could be cured with a vegetarian diet. worked, and I was stuck with it. That was how I became known as grandson has adopted the vegetarian regimen. "I asked him why, and he told me, 'Meal makes me sad.' "

Lyon spent most of his work-ing life as the unrepentant hrown-hagger among the ex-pense-account set of the advertising todustry. When he stayed late for meetings, dinner was a peanut butter sandwich on the 7:05 to Westport. "They used to call me the Huck Finn of Madison Avenue," he said. But his career - which included new-product development for several food companies and the advertising campaign that depicted Mariburo as a filtered ciga-rette that nonetheless was suitably macho — ended ahrupily with two heart attacks in 1980. The months of recuperation gave him time to "think strategy." And the less he saw anyone advertising for or writing about brown-haggers, the more be sensed his future in their bumble midst.

"You would look in a newspa per, and see a column for chess players. And a column for moose hunters. The tide tables. You had information for all sorts of minute and obscure segments of the population. But nothing for brown-baggers. That was the most amazing thing. It was invisible, a dormant market. No one was paying attention to it'

tion. General Mills and American Can - to pay him to pay attention. In his preliminary search he and his aides asked 400 people to 10 cities what they ate for lunch. By early 1981 he felt secure enough to send out bro-chures announcing, "The Brown-Bag Report." It did not, at first, knock anyone dead. One executive at Ralston-Purina, Lyon re-called, asked, "What would I do with it?"

But the skepticism faded and by September 1981 Lyon had signed four clients at $20,000 each, enough to begin polling. He now has nine clients, including General Foods, Beatrice Corp. and Nahisco Brands. Each receives a quarterly report based on a random nationwide telephone survey of 1,500 people conducted by Lynn Losen of Strategic Alternatives of Norwalk, Connecticut. The reports include one section of "core data" of general market development, one section of "category and hrand analysis" io areas such as "salty snacks" or "sandwich fillings" and one spe-cial question of the client's choice. The answers to that question are broken down by demographic measures.

Lyon is reluctant to reveal all that be bas found, since his livelihood depends on selling such secrets. There is one personal taste, bowever, that he is willing to divulge: "I am a peanut butter

YKK: The Big Zipper

By Karl Schoenberger

The Associated Press WROBE, Japan — Although 5,000 people are said to work there in three shifts, hardly a soul is in sight at the main factory complex of Yoshida Kogyo, or YKK, the world's largest maker of zippers. A ride on electric cards through the labyrinth of factory buildings reveals an overwhelming array of industrial robots and automated assemblers, all churning away unattended.

Zippers may not be as glamocuppers may not be as giamo-rous as automobiles, stereo equip-ment and computer hardware, but they have given YKK a last grip on success. What began in 1934 with a few employees using hand-powered machines is now a multinational giant with factories in 37 countries and production lines that epitomize Japanese industrial prowess.

YKK holds 25 percent of the world zipper market. It estimates it will have total 1982 sales of $2.5 billion and production of 1.17 million miles (1.9 million kilometers) of zipper. That's long enough to go to the moon and back two and a go to the moon and back two and a half times," noted Tadao Yoshida, 74, YKK's president and founder. From his headquarters in Kurobe, on the Sea of Japan about 159 miles west of Tokyo, Yoshida has built an empire based on a golden-rule business philosophy that he calls "the cycle of goodthat he calls "the cycle of good-

"We think of capital as a loan, he said, "and everybody io the company takes part io managing

The idea is not a revolutionary one to Japan, where most compa-nies are heavily financed by banks and the debt-equity ratio often runs as high as 7 to 3. But YKK debt financing also tovolves cir-cumventing the banks for a considerable chunk of its cash.

In a profit sharing plan, employees return at least 10 percent of their wages to the company, as well as half their annual bonuses. The tithing is not compulsory, but as many as 90 percent of YKK's 14,500 Japanese workers in six plants and numerous offices throughout the country participate. They are paid interest by YKK that is competitive with banking accounts. They eventually receive YKK stock options.

Yoshikatsu Sasaki, a spokesman at YKK's Tokyo office, said that, said, as of March 1982, employees had invested 9 billion yen ($39 million) in the company and owned 45 percent of its stock, valued at 5.6 bil-

YKK's success is due in large part to its sticking with a proven product. But Yoshida bitterly re-called the time in the late 1960s when YKK was ready to break into the textile industry with the formidable productive capacity it had developed around zipper tapes, the cloth attached to the zipper chain. Ministry of International Trade and Industry officials quickly warned Yoshida off, fearing YKK would devastate the textile industry with its productive might.

Yoshida's only other attempt at diversification was in aluminum sash production to 1959. Yoshida reluctantly made the move to order to keep an older hrother, who wanted to strike out on his own, in the business. YKK's sales of aluminum materials — 99 percent of them in Japan — are listed at 270 billion yen and have long surpassed domestic zipper revenues. But while YKK's profits are secret. the zipper industry worldwide appears to be its bread and butter.

Yoshida said he had skirted hiti, ade friction over the trade friction over the years hy establishing plants overseas rather for than flooding foreign markets with cheaper and better zippers. He em-ploys $,500 workers abroad, and he sensaid YKK never took profit out of Ara country more than the amount necessary to repay the interest on his employee "loans."

But with zipper exports of 45.3 ring But with zipper exports of 45.3 mg billion yen last year, Yoshida is nofanstranger to trade tension. In reMarch, Japanese officials said thatharU.S. officials were reportedly use iog fastener imports, for national and security reasons.

Sasaki said YKK's nearest com-irks petitor is Talon, a division of Tex-said fron Inc. in the United States, but which he estimates holds a little ex-less than 20 percent of the world zipper market. Asked if there is all is significant technology gap between in the rival zipper giants, he said there was no comparison.

Talon, he maintained, is merely a "specialist" zipper company that passably keeps trousers fastened and YKK, on the other hand, can zipast up just about anything. "YKK is ind of the almighty zipper maker," Sasaki ac.
